1. Software engineering is a systematic approach to developing and maintaining software.

2. Functional requirements describe what the system must do.

3. Functional requirements describe behavior. Non-functional requirements describe quality such as performance, security, and reliability. For example, login is functional while completing login within two seconds is non-functional.